No one will dispute the assertion that such action would have involved us in the war immediately. The American statesmen crisis—the men who actually kept us out of war, were the Republican senators, aided by seven patriotic Democrats, who prevented the passage of the ship purchase bill.

There is but one virtue revealed by Mr. Wilson in this letter: It is his first public acknowledgement that he has changed his mind. On numerous other occasions his divagations have been disclosed by his actions. The list is a long one. Panama canal tolls, presidential primaries, "pitiless publicity," congressional caucus, popular government, regulation by commission, government economy in expenditures, civil service reform, free sugar, woman suffrage, giving business a rest, keeping business out of polities, "strict accountability," Mexico, single-term plank, and "preparedness," are some of the policies on which he has changed his mind.
